

LOS ANGELES

I'M YOURS

Home Newsbites LA Drinks Map About Contributors Contact

A Little Cloud From Friendswithyou

By Kyle Fitzpatrick
Posted June 10, 2014

New locals and hyper positivists FriendsWithYou just make the cutest, most adorable, lovely work. You can't complain about anything that they produced: it's all so damn lovely. They've recently paired up with fine art object makers Case Studyo to make a new functional aesthetic something that you may want. It's called the Little Cloud and you'll find it to be a suitable, warming nightlight for yourself—and the small child inside you too.

The intent of Little Cloud is to be an object that brings “peace and love.” It’s a tri-bump white figure that glows from the inside out with two dot eyes and a floating, upward parenthetical mouth that practically blushes a smile: it’s adorable. It’s a symbol of unconditional love, intended to float around from place to place offering some illumination to those in need of it. It was made in collaboration with Paul Kasmin Shop and features multiple intensities as well as battery or plug-in options, making the light actually ready to go where you need it to go.

My only question about Little Cloud is it’s materials: is it glass? I suspect it to be and am curious as it’s such a light and friendly object that—as the pictures suggest—you would want to cuddle with on a stormy night. Or perhaps it’s a durable plastic? No idea. It’s also big and small at 30 X 21 X 21 centimeters, which would make it an interesting thing to have around the house. You can grab this little light dude here or here.

<http://www.laimyours.com/68215/a-little-cloud-from-friendswithyou/>